Welcome to this class on Project Teamwork and Leadership. This course conforms with the ANSI Project Management Standard as revised in 2012. During this course, you will learn the fundamental skills, tools, and techniques used by project managers to lead your project team and improve your interpersonal skills. Most of our work will focus on large project teams so that you will learn the nuances of interactions between many individuals. Of course, these can be applied to projects of any size.

This course has been designed to encourage written discussions between you, your classmates, and your instructor. You will also apply real-world practices to a team project by creating many of the documents required to improve your team's performance. Throughout the course, please keep in mind the Saint Leo core values of respect and integrity as you learn how to “achieve results and feel good about it.”

Once again, welcome to this hands-on course. Your instructor is looking forward to discussing project management and leadership with each one of you. Remember, your life is your most important project and you can use these tools and techniques to guide your life to achieve your success!
